Headline:
Outbreaks of rain, sleet and snow moving south today. Cold.

Today:
A rather cold and cloudy day, with outbreaks of patchy rain, sleet and snow moving slowly southwards. Snow mostly confined to hills, but not exclusively. It will become drier with clear spells developing by evening, perhaps a few coastal showers. Maximum temperature 2 deg C (36 deg F).

Tonight:
Mostly dry with lengthy clear skies inland overnight. A widespread frost with the risk of icy stretches forming. A few light showers are likely along the east coast. Minimum temperature -3 deg C (27 deg F).

Saturday:
After a cold and frosty start, it will be mostly fine and dry, with good spells of sunshine. Despite the sunshine and light winds, it will feel rather cold. Maximum temperature 3 deg C (37 deg F).

Outlook for Sunday to Tuesday:
Turning cloudier on Sunday, after a cold and frosty start. Outbreaks of rain will slowly edge southwards on Monday. Windy and less cold. Drier, brighter and milder on Tuesday.
